Soviet Speech Upsets Hopes On SALT Pact

By Don Oberdorfer

— A few minutes into Saturday morning's SALT meeting around a polished table at the Soviet mission in Geneva. Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko turned with full force to an issue of treaty timing that had not seemed to be a serious problem in the past.

Before his speech was over, U.S. negotiators knew that their high hopes for early completion of the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty and a January summit conference had been dashed.

Mr. Gromyko had brought up the timing question briefly during Friday's meetings with Cyrus Vance, the U.S. secretary of state. and it had been mentioned to reporters later that day during a background briefing in Washington by Zbigniew Brzezinski, a presiden-

At that point, however, the matter was considered one that could be resolved at a summit meeting of President Carter and Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev rather than an issue that might be employed to postpone the summit.

U.S. officials cannot be certain why the Russians introduced a complicating problem just when the SALT negotiations were on the verge of success. Some of them have a compelling theory: The extraneous issue was chosen carefully by Kremlin leaders midway through the Geneva talks to block the agreement and the January summit without raising fundamental questions of nuclear-arms conceptance among U.S. officials, is the bolt-from-the-blue normalization of Washington's relations with Peking and the announcement of a briefing from his foreign minister. U.S. trip by Vice Premier Teng Moshe Dayan, who met last week-Hsaio-ping to hegin Jan. 29. Moshe Dayan, with U.S. Secretary

Plans for a meeting between Marshal Tito, 86, and Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev were postponed in the fall after severe Soviet press criticism of the warm wel-come given by Yugoslavia to Mr. Hua. In a speech in September, Marshal Tito expressed surprise at the Kremlin attacks and forcefully defended his action in assisting China's historic opening to the outside world.

The mending of fences with doscow is not necessarily directly connected with Yugoslavia a new harsher climate toward domestic political dissent, which has become evident over the last week. Both developments, however, reflect the continued skillful balancing act performed by Marshal Tito since he came to power in Yugoslavia after World War II.

After several years of relative relaxation at home and rapidly im proving relations with the United States and China at the expense of the Soviet Union. Marshal Tito apparently has judged that it is time to nudge the political pendulum in the opposite direction. SWAPO Claims It Killed 200 in S. African Army

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania, Dec. 25 (Reuters) — The South-West Africa People's Organization said today that it had killed more than 200 South African soldiers in three months.

Peter Mweshihange, SWAPO secretary for foreign relations, accused Western nations of insincerity and double-dealing in negotiations for the independence of the South African-administered territory, also called Namibia.

A SWAPO communique issued here said: "With the active support of the Namibian masses, the People's Liberation Army of Namibia wiped out over 200 enemy soldiers, pulverised two enemy bases and beavily damaged 38 South African combat vehicles between last Angust and October.

Mr. Mweshihange told the Tanzanian news agency: "We will now wage a relentless struggle until vic-tory is attained. We will find it difficult to accept participation in any future talks on Namibia. We strongly believe that the liberation of Namibia will only be achieved through armed struggle no marter how protracted it will be," he said.

SALT, taking it to mid-1982 under The United States some time ago proposed Jan. 1, 1981, for termination of the protocol, and recently offered to extend this to June 30, 1981, still about a year sbort of the Soviet demand.

The Russians have agreed to a fixed date for dismantling their missiles, according to informed sources. This date is reported to be between June 30, 1981, and June

The matter of these dates involves no fundamental issue, and until Mr. Gromyko spoke strongly, there seemed no reason that the question could not be resolved easily. Now the problem is more serious, and it will be up to Moscow to decide when to move.

Accord on Telemetry

What was considered a more serious problem before Geneva - the question of Soviet encoding of some missile testing data, or telemetry — is reported to have been re-solved at Geneva. This was made known yesterday in response to pleas in the U.S. press for the United States to insist on the issue,

The basis for the solution appears to have been a pledge by Moscow not to encode missile testing data when such action would interfere with verification of the U.S.-Soviet agreements nnder

It is uncertain, however, whether the two sides fully agree on the de-tails of just when encoding would be permitted, and when it would be

Tentative Soviet acceptance of a deal on the missile data issue and possibly on some other outstanding questions — is what caused U.S. officials to be almost enphorie last Friday about the chances for immediate agreement on a SALT treaty. Some of the most cautious and usually skeptical officials, at that point, were convinced that the Russians had come to Geneva to wind up the six years of SALT-2 negotiations.

They learned differently when Mr. Gromyko suddenly became uncooperative and hrought up new problems.

Officials of the Los Angeles Planning Department and of Bev-erly Hills, an incorporated city surrounded by Los Angeles and adja-cent to Bel Air, said that they had not been informed of plans for such a large project, which, if carried out, would apparently require the closing of several public streets. Official approval would be needed

Beverly Hills officials acknowledged, however, that they were processing plans for a smaller but ess substantial residential project on property purchased last year by a representative of one of the shah's three sisters, Princess Shamas, at a price of $1.9 million. According to plans submitted to the city of Beverly Hills, two large homes would be built on the propwhich is behind the Beverly Hills Hotel. One of the homes for which plans have been submitted would have almost 11,000 square feet of floor space, or almost eight times as much as in a typical new home in a California subdivision. The other would have 8,600 square feet.

On the building-permit applica-tions, the construction cost of the larger bome was placed at $500,000, excluding land, and that of the second was put at $300,000. Beverly Hills officials noted that figures used in permit applications often do not reflect the full construction costs.

The possibility that Shah Mobammed Reza Pahlevi is planning a palace here - possibly as one of several residences for his use if he is forced from power - has aroused intense curiosity in real-es-

Several agents specializing in the high-priced property of Bel Air and Beverly Hills said last week that they had heard reports from other agents that an unknown foreign buyer had sent agents to acquire several contiguous properties, and that tentative offers for property at prices that exceeded the market value had already been made for some parcels.

However, none of these agents could confirm the reports and they disagreed on the locality of the land in question. Some said the deal involved property in Bel Air; others said it was in Beverly Hills, others said they bad heard that it involved undeveloped land in the hills above the two communities.

Mike Silverman, a Beverly Hills real-estate broker who said that be handled last year's purchase of the land for the shah's sister near the Beverly Hills Hotel, said that be was involved in obtaining addi-tional property for the shah's family that entailed "a substantial amount of money." The Yugoslav anthorities face a considerable dilemma in deciding how to deal with Mr. Mihajlov, who was released from prison under an amnesty in November, 1977, after serving half of a seven-year sentence. Unlike other dissidents, he enjoys hardly any support with-in the country itself, but, it is wide-ly acknowledged, his time in prison merely gives him an importance and political platform.

Only last week a doctor in the Central Republic of Bosnia was sentenced to six years' imprison-ment for making what were consid-ered anti-Yugoslav remarks in private to a group of friends — clearly a lesser crime than those now being laid to Mr. Mihajlov.

Evidence of new attempts to end the feud with the Soviet Union was provided last week by the meeting between Marshal Tito and Mikhail Solomintsey, an alternate member of the ruling Soviet Politburo, on the Yugoslav leader's private island of Briom in the Adriatic. Mr. Solomintsev officially was reported to have conveyed a message from Mr.
Brezhnev expressing hopes for improved relations — a sentiment echoed by Marshai Tito.

The Israeli Army, fearing an attempt by the Palestinian underground to disrupt Christmas services, clamped tight security on this hilltop city.

An army half-track was parked near the square where choirs sang Christmas carols. There were paratroopers with automatic weapons on the rooftops around the Church of the Nativity, which stands above the grotto where Jesus is said to have been born.

There were roadblocks on all routes to the town, and at checkpoints near the square all visitors were halted and searched, men by armed male soldiers, women by female soldiers

Cardinal Stefan Wyszynski made the prediction five days after it became public that Pol-ish censors had deleted reference es to human rights and to St.

Cardinal Wyszynski said during his annual address at St. John's Cathedral, that the time was approaching for the pope's visit for celebrations marking the 900th anniversary of the martyrdom of St. Stanislaw, a bishop of Cracow and patron saint of Poland.

He called for a religious revival, adding: "We would like to please the holy father when he comes to Poland."

Carter Restores $2 Billion In Planned Welfare Cuts

By Terence Smith

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25 (NYT) cuts that Mr. Carter restored Fri-- Responding to recent appeals by the nation's mayors and minority groups. President Carter has restored about $2 billinn in anticipaled cuts in the social-welfare budget for the upcoming fiscal year.

In a final, 312-hour budget-review session with his top aides Friday described by nne participant as a "tough, argumentative meeting" — Mr. Carter made his final decisions on a budget that is expected to to-tal $532 billion for fiscal year 1980. which begins next Oct. 1. The budget is expected to include a deficit of approximately $29 billinn and reflect an increase of roughly 3 percent in defense outlays above real inflation.

The tradition of final "Christmas-present" restorations to the budget, as one presidential aide de-scribed Friday's actions, is well-established. But Mr. Carter was given an added incentive this year by the appeals of the mayors and black leaders who warned of unrest in the cities if domestic programs were slasbed too much,

The purpose of Friday's meeting was to decide the final cuts that would be necessary to keep the 1980 budget deficit within the $30 billinn target that Mr. Carter set for himself. The latest administration estimate of the current deficit was put at $42 billion.

Top Aides Summoned

Mr. Carter summoned Vice President Mondale; James MeIntyre Jr., the director of the Office of Management and Budget; and Stuart Eizenstat, the president's domestic-affairs adviser, to a small study next to the Oval Office at 8:45 a.m. to make the final deci-

The Delay on SALT

It's just as well, we think, that Secretary of State Cyrus Vance ended his Geneva meetings with his Soviet counterpart with neither a SALT agreement nor a summit date in the hag. The one, scheduling of a summit, hinged on the consummation of the other, a treaty limiting offensive strategic arms. These would have been regarded, at least tentauvely, as major achievements. But one particular issue that seems to have held up SALT is central to the prospects of Senate ratification of a completed agreement, and it would have been quite reckless to accept an inadequate resolution of it just to wrap up the negotiations at this time.

The issue involves the relatively new Soviet practice of putting into a code defying U.S. monitoring certain information or telemetry sent hack hy missiles being tested. The practice simply does not square with the Soviet-U.S. pledge not to interfere with the other side's "national technical means" - electronic eyes and ears — of verifying compliance with a SALT agreement. This pledge was written into the SALT-1 agreement restricting offensive missiles in 1972 and it is part of the SALT-2 pact being negotiated now. In Geneva, the U.S. delegation asked for clearcut restrictions on encoding telemetry. The Soviet response evidently was unsatisfactory. Differences were also reported on several other issues, including some that were previously resolved and that were reopened by the Soviet side. Nonetheless, the gaps are said to be of the sort that can he narrowed hy the respective SALT delegations in a relatively

We hope so. But meanwhile it is worth underlining that telemetry is a lot more than one of those exotic technical issues that make would-be readers of SALT stories turn to the funny pages. Telemetry goes directly to verification: the requirement, as much political as technical, that whatever is agreed on, the United States must be in a position to see that the Russians make good on their word. For a crucial swing bloc of senators on whom ratification of a treaty will rest, verification may be even more important than the marginal differences in numbers and terms that are all that could be expected to emerge from the final drafting of this treaty.

Indeed, given the way the nuts and holts of SALT-2 have been machined by the technicians and hureaucrats literally for years, the real SALT issue is whether the Senate thinks Jimmy Carter is a fit guardian of the nation's security in the overall context of Soviet-U.S. relations. At this late hour, nothing could more surely undermine Mr. Carter's claim to be such a guardian than to have the impression cast that he was hasty or careless on an important aspect of verification. That is why, given the terms he was offered, there is no cause for undue dismay that Mr. Vance is returning from Geneva empty-handed.

Mexican Oil and U.S. Policy

A diplomat once remarked that since the United States took away the best third of Mexico's land, U.S. relations with Mexico haven't heen too had. Both propositions may need revision.

Even with all the oil in Texas and all the charms of California, it now appears that the most valuable third of Mexico was far to the south. There is increasing evidence that the greatest lake of oil in the world may lie beneath Mexican lands and waters. The Mexican state oil monopoly, Permex, now estimates "possible" reserves at 300 billion barrels, or more than Saudi Arahia's. Present production of 1.5 million harrels a day is expected to rise to 4 or 5 million barrels in two or three years, an amount close to the normal production in Iran, where there is now a decided lack of normality.

Thus Mexico may have enough oil to supply the United States for 40 years, along short and secure transport routes. Partly for that reason it behooves the United States to reconsider whether its relationship with Mexico is good enough. Such reassessment of policy, ordered by President Carter, is nearing completion in Washington.

Clumsy conduct hy both sides marked the two nations' early relationship. More recently there has been a routine cordiality despite a number of irritants. Even before he knew the extent of Mexican oil reserves, Mr. Carter showed himself sensitive to the importance of a better relatsionship, and on several issues there have been useful agreements or . promising negotiations.

However, irritants remain. One of the most important is the illegal immigration of Mexicans into the United States. President Lopez Portillo calls that emigration the "safety valve" of Mexican society, relieving his nation's massive unemployment and one of the worst distributions of wealth in the Western Hemisphere. He opposes any U.S. attempt to screw down the valve too tightly. An administration policy memorandum warns that Mexico would regard an attempt to do so as a "hostile" act. That casts doubt on the wisdom of a House committee recommendation that immigration enforcement he sharply increased.

It can be argued that with a border so long and so porous, the only real solution to the flow of illegals is greater prosperity in Mexico. The new oil will help greatly. But Mexican leaders do not want to see their country become an "oil-financed welfare state" on the model of some Arah sheikhdoms. They want halanced economic development that creates jobs. To achieve this, they want greater access to U.S. markets to reduce the imhalance of trade that now greatly favors Americans, Mr. Carter is under pressure at least to maintain, if not increase, protection for American industries and farmers, but some relaxation of trade harriers, including the discriminatory grading of Mexican produce, may be possible.

In preparing the president for the current policy review, an interagency committee has suggested several choices. This country could asssume that Mexico will become a powerful actor on the world stage and seek a special relationship with it, or it could continue to regard Mexico as an emerging nation. In any case, U.S. policy-makers now recognize that Mexico must be treated seriously. Both immigration and trade policy need to be jointly re-evaluated.

Some of the irritants between the two neighbors grow out of conflicting priorities. American labor unions want immigration controlled; American shoe manufacturers want tariffs; the secretary of energy did not want to import Mexican natural gas at a relatively high price while Congress was wrestling with energy legislation last year. Now, bowever, a better relationship with Mexico has become one of our highest priorities. The United States should he glad for Mexico's good fortune and for the opportunity to move from an unequal neighborliness toward a truer partnership.

coln Steffens returned from Russia in 1919 after viewing the Bolshevik Revolution, he pro-claimed, "I have seen the future and it works."

Today, having just returned from a 17-day visit to post-Mao China, the most I can say is that the direcuon of China's future is being drastically altered, but whether, or how, it will work is something else again. The U.S.-Chinese normalization agreement is, of course, a major step for the Chinese to that altering of direction. It is also part of a game of high strategy involving China, the United States and the Soviet Union. But to a visitor, the reality of

China's cities and, above all, its countryside, where at least 80 percent of the people live, is an overwhelming sense of poverty, of hard labor and of what amounts to personal imprisonment to the Communist system. China is the biggest company town the world has ever

Yet to say that alone, to criticize the gap between plans and fulfillment, to point to a long list of China's shortcomings, is to take a very lopsided view. For China to-day offers, I would venture, a better shake in life to more of its hundreds of millions of people than ever bas been the case in its centuries of recorded history.

The Communist regime, despite all the upheavals and convulsions since it came to power, has at least and at last created an egalitarianism of poverty, a minimum of food, clothing and shelter, that is in sharp contrast to the inequifies and inequalities of the "old China."

It is precisely because efforts to move further ahead, to rise above such minimal levels and standards, are now deemed by the Peking regime to require a massive infusion of outside belp that the majority in the leadership has turned to the capitalist world of the United States, Japan and Western Europe. It is a judgment with which I would certainly concur.

Each visitor to China today is likely to have his point of compari-son, of reference; how things differ from the United States, or from a comparably populous and poor nation, such as India, or from the other Communist giant, the Soviet Union. My own chief benchmark, bowever, is the "old China" of the balf-year just before World War II. began in 1939, a balf-year I spent there when the Japanese controlled, by armed force, most of the cities and the connecting railroads but little of the countryside. At that ume, the white man's foreign "concessions," wrung from imperial China largely at the point of a gun, were still a fact of life — and there was a detail each morning to pick up the dead bodies from the streets of Shanghai's International British with U.S. belp.

Looked at from that perspective, today's China has ended mass starvarion, mastered previously uncontrolled disastrous floods, embarked on reforestation of vast areas so long barren, instituted with its paramedic "barefoot doctors" a form of national health care bowever often it is minimal and primitive, brought electricity to so many places that never had it before and instituted a system by which a single language, what we call Manda-rin Chinese, already is becoming the common tongue.

But there is so much more to do - and so many shortfalls in every one of the gains. It is the recognition of this that is now working its way down from the Chinese leadership to the bureaucracy and party

It is because Teng and his allies ow to power have ended the years of ideological purity represented by the "Gang of Four" and that group's seeming manipulation of the senile Mao to his final years that, one ventures to say, the direction of China's future can be dimly seen. It is Teng and his allies who have suddenly opened China to the world, seeking aid, credits, ex-pertise and just about everything else. It is a gigantic gamble to make a reality of their dream of a mod-

The murky nature of much of

A sampling of some of those Chi-nese who have some say in manage-ment of the national enterprise leaves one with a feeling that they are exhausted from such past aberrations and desperately hope that the new policies will last so that proclaimed goals for the year 2000 can be achieved. The logic of it all is that these people surely must want the new order to last.

But Communist systems all share the same great weakness: a lack of a legitimacy of succession. Power does grow out of the barrel of a gun, as Mao said, and force is the final arbiter of politics in a Communist state. If there are hidden tensions within the regime in Peking, as is widely believed, then the normalization agreement surely must add to them.

And so one can only suggest af-ter a look at today's China that perhaps the odds do favor Teng's pragmatte policies, that perhaps they have a reasonable chance to survive him. For the sake of the people of China, one must hope so.

Economic Plight

The catalyst in the situation is the country's severe economic plight. As has been recognized on sides, this crisis means that socialism is a nonstarter until the country again begins generating wealth. As one party intellectual remarked succinctly, "Socialism can't be operated when there is no accumulated wealth to redistribute."

For decades under the dietatorship, money power was concentrated in the hands of the right. The revolution in 1974 interrupted this, turning the society upside down almost overnight. Now, some of the left's strategists think, conservative forces are regrouping and growing in influence. And at a pace which they fear may not give the Socialists time to produce viable answers to the challenge.

The point is underlined in a book just published by former military hero and prominent conservative figure in the revolution's early days. Gen. Antonio Spinola. The general, who fell from favor and fled the country some months after the coup. claims that the unstakes that followed the overthrow of the dictatorship will mark Portugal for years. He calls for a return to the derailed project first presented by the coup's leaders.

As far as he is concerned, getting back on track means ending leftist notions and returning to liberal democracy. These indeed are the sort of views gaining ground among many on the right, not the least in the main opposition Social Democratic Party, and in the ranks of the conservative Center Democrats.

President's Role

President's Role

The mediator in what could be a looming ideological clash between left and right is the president, Gen. Antonio Ramalho Eanes. This has been a harder transition than in most other recent years, because it has cut across the norma assumptions and allegiances of both conservatives and liberals. Generalizations are treacherous. but on the whole the tendency of the conservatives has been to approve the Carter administration's emphasis on budget restraint at nome, and oppose its innovations abroad. Meanwhile the liberals have tended to go along with Carter's foreign policy reforms and oppose his domestic emphasis on

A Jerky Ride

There are obviously many excep-tions on both sides, but Carter bas had his foot on the gas overseas and his foot on the brake at home and this has taken his passengers on a jerky ride into strange surroundings where nobody is very comfortable.

Abroad, he has ended, on the installment plan, U.S. control over the Panama Canal, announced the establishment of normal diplomatic relations with Peking and given notice of his intention to terminate the U.S. treaty of mutual defense with Taiwan. Also, he has formed closer personal and political ties to Egypt and military ues to Saudi Arabia, to the dismay of Israel, which charges him now with breaking the "special relationship" be-tween the United States and Israel. > we are coming into the last year of the 1970s in a strange situauon. Everything is a little mixed up. Old alliances are breaking up before new coalitions have formed around the ambiguous issues. Party ideology and loyalty have declined. Voter participation in the 1978 congressional elections was the lowest in more than 30 years, and in the face of public indifference and cynicism, special-interest groups, concentrating on their particular issues, tended to overwhelm consideration of common policies in the general interest.

Carter managed to hold his own fairly well with his pragmatic stopand-go policies at home and abroad, but most of the time he was just squeaking through abroad or losing on his oil, economic, and tax policies at bome. And even when he won, he was leaving be-hind a host of defeated, aggrieved and even emhittered minorities.

Fragmented

This may be the most troubling and significant problem for the United States in the last year of the 70s and the opening years of the 80s. Namely, that there is no general agreement about where the nation is going at home or abroad, that its politics are fragmented and break down into a struggle, not between ideas and parties, but between special-interest factions. There are a lot of angry people in Washington these days, some of them against Carter's location of the budget, on strategie arms agreements with the Soviet Union, on the recognition of Pe-king and ending the defense treaty with Taiwan, the rhetoric is becoming more emotional and personal.

Sen. Goldwater denounces the president's decision as a "cowardly act," and "an affront to the Constitution that risks impeachment." The major labor and black leaders charge him with indifferences to the plight of the poor. And that is

Many leaders of the American Jewish community charge him with favoring Egypt and implying that he is "selling out to the oil interests." it would not be helpful, and would probably make things even worse, to report the true reactions, of the leaders of the Carter admin-istration to all this. Carter has actually issued an order to his principal to listen but shut up, but it would be foolish to deny that se rious divisions are developing here between the factions at home and the allies overseas.

The paradox of this is that rela tions between the regions, the racing the sexes and the generation within this country are much bette at the end of the '70s than the were at the beginning. And that reliations between the United States and its allies and adversaries hav also improved dramatically in the last 10 years — but all this chang makes people do hard things with their minds. This holiday season the United States is not at war and where in the world, but it is not ! peace with itself.

World Bank Proposes Aid For 3d World Oil Projects

By J.P. Smith

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25 (WP)

— The World Bank in a major policy shift, is proposing to lend $450 million in "risk capital" over the countries to explore for oil and natopment loan program.

In addition, the bank is expected to approve a $340-million, five-year coal development program at the January meeting, according to informed sources.

Details of the plan are laid out in a World Bank proposal, which is being circulated to its 20-member board of directors and which was obtained by The Washington Post.

The question of whether the bank should be involved in promoting the development of oil and gas in less-developed countries — par-ticularly in high-risk oil exploration ventures - has been the subject of running and occasionally heated debate since the idea was first promoted after world oil prices qua-

Rapid oil-price increases, and the economic slowdown that followed in the industrial countries, bad a devastating effect on many of the Third World countries that were not members of the Organization of Petroleum Exploring Countries.

Political Symbol

In domestic energy circles, the proposal to have the World Bank directly involved in lending money to Third World countries — and indirectly competing with some major oil companies — has become a political symbol of U.S. determina-tion to stimulate the development of non-OPEC sources of oil.

Supporters of the bank oil and gas loan program, which includes funding for geological exploration, wildcat drilling, and funds to develop known resources, say that there is enormous untapped potential for oil production from about 50 less-developed countries in Latin America, Africa and Asia. This potential may be equal to or larger than the Alaskan and North Sea oil fields

Bank energy experts.

The 35-page proposal says that "investing in perfoleum exploration is inherently riskier than in conventional bank projects." The document, however, goes on to argue that, by lending seed money and by acting as the so-called honest broker between host countries and international oil companies, the bank can play a positive role in stimulating oil developent in the Third World. This, in turn, is expected to reduce the severe financial burdens posed by high oil prices that have hamstrung many Third World countries.

The result of the loan program, the bank proposal says, is that it "is likely to attract oil companies to invest capital for exploration in a wider range of countries."

Nearly two-thirds, or about $2.07 billion, of the bank's loans and credits would go toward developing known oil and natural gas reserve in oil-importing countries. These loans, which in many cases will be "seed" money to go with other funds horrowed at commercial terms or invested by foreign companies, will go toward developing resources that otherwise would have not been developed.

An additional $460 million will be made available for so-called appraisal drilling — sinking wells in known fields of oil and gas to determine whether the deposits can determine whether the deposits can be developed economically.

The bank has also earmarked bout $102 million for geophysical and geological surveys, the first stage of oil and gas development.

With the exception of the exploratory drilling, the bank's other oil and gas loans or credits are categorized as low risk.

regorized as low risk.

Earlier this year, the World Bank issued projections saying that the less-developed non-OPEC countries are producing about 3.8 million barrels a day, but could produce 8.5 million by 1985 and 10.4 million by 1900 million by 1990.

If these goals are met, and the bank energy loan program is suc-cessful, then as many as 50 or more Third World countries could become self-sufficient in oil production by 1990.

Countries engaged in active dis-cussion with the bank for exploration and development loans include: Chad, Bolivia. Zaire, Egypt, Tunisia, Turkey, Syria and Colombia. Before fiscal 1978, all of the

L. de Rochemont Before fiscal 1978, all of the bank's loans for energy were confined to pipelines — classified as transportation — or assistance to build electrical-geogration plants. Since July, however, the bank has lent $189 million, including $150 million for developing India's Bomtional Development Association (1DA) in the form of "soft loans."

World Bank experts have said seed-money loans, Third World countries will in some cases be able to attract an additional $3 billion to $4 billion from international capital markets or from private oil

The World Bank's energy package, considered by many partici-pants as ooe of the bank's most innovauve and potentially most ef-fective undertakings in years, is the product of intensive negotiations that peaked at the Bonn economic summit last July, when the beads of the industrial countries agreed to press the development of Third World energy resources. U.S. reluctance to support the expanded oil and gas program, and in particular the loans for exploration, had been centered in the Energy Department, where some mid-level policy-makers argued that by funding exploration, this bank could produce an unnecessary high

One of the Carter administracredible nuclear deterrent is unreal-— One of the Carter administra-tion's leading concerns now that the United States is terminating its defense commitment to Taiwan is how to keep the Taipei government from trying to develop nuclear weapons, according to authorita-

U.S. experts believe that, if Taiwan decided to launch a major effort to acquire nuclear weapons, it could produce its first atomic device in less than two years. The question of how to dissuade

Taiwan from taking this step is a very real one, for knowledgeable sources believe that, following President Richard Nixon's visit to Pe-king in 1971, Taipei decided to move closer to a nuclear-weapons capability.

On two separate occasions, the United States learned of Taiwanese efforts to develop a plutoniumreprocessing capability — a process that would give Taipei material suitable for atomic bombs. The United States brought strong pressure on the Taipei government following the most recent incident in 1977, arguing that Taiwan could better serve its security interests by maintining its relationship with the United States than by trying to develop nuclear Leading U.S. officials say the

Most believe that long before Taiwan actually could achieve such a nuclear capability, China — which already has an inventory of several hundred atomic weapoos - would take military action to bring such a threat to an end.

Thus, the task facing the Carter administration, in the view of one key government official, is to persuade Taiwan that its best interest continues to lie in a "declining, re-sidual American relationship rather than in an effort to develop a weak.

vulnerable nuclear deterrent. Despite the changes that will take place in the formal relation-ship, the United States will continue to have considerable leverage.

Taiwan already has put one U.S.built nuclear power plaot into operation, and five additional U.S. atomic power statioos are either on order or under construction.

Only Fuel Source

Taiwan's only source of the lowenriched uranium fuel for these power statioos — which by the mid-1980s will be generating about one-third of the island's electricity - is the United States. Carter administration say there is no reason that U.S. cooperation with Taiwan's civilian nuclear-power program should oot continue. In fact, officials privately express the hope that no effort will be made by Congress or the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to block a continuation of the relationship afpower program. For one thing, the U.S. Nuclear Nonproliferation Act, signed by dates a cutoff of all nuclear supplies to any government that ap-pears to be trying to develop an atomic-weapons capability. The United States also might decide, if it detected any nuclear moves of a disturbing nature, to end whatever conunuing arrangements may be made to supply conventional arms, ammunition and spare parts to Taiwan. The Carter administration also will insist as part of the arrangement for civilian atomic cooperation that Taiwan continue to allow all its nuclear facilities to be "safeguarded" and inspected regularly by the International Atomic Ener Agency. Perhaps the strongest argument the United States can make against any Taiwanese inclination to develop nuclear weapons is that such a move would almost certainly provoke the military showdown it would be designed to deter.

As Crucial Party Meeting Ends

The Chinese news agency reported Saturday that the 11th Central Committee's third plenary session, the most important party meeting in nearly a year, ended Friday after the delegates agreed to a number of imprecedented foreign- and domestic-policy decisions.

The meeting followed weeks of intense discussions at the top of the Chinese leadership that seemed to set a definite course toward closer ties with the West and much more experimentation with once-forbid-den policies, such as extensive foreign loans and the sending of many students abroad.

The central decisions appear to bear the stamp of the party vice chairman, Teng Hsiao-ping, who saw a few more of his closest political allies promoted to the ruling Politburo.

Startling Promotion

Chen Yun, 73, a veteran economist and financial expert, received the most startling promotion when he was advanced to the fifth-highest party position by the delegates to the session. Mr. Chen's new position as a party vice chairman puts him ahead of another vice chairman. Wang Tung-bsing, once Mao's bodyguard. Mr. Wang bas been vebemently criticized in some recent wall posters for denying human rights, and his demotion from the fifth to the sixth spot in the party hierarchy may reflect that

The communique from the five-day session hinted that some party members were still resisting the Western-style economic reforms, such as large wage incentives, that Mr. Teng and Mr. Cben bave pro-posed. The session voted to form an extraordinary 100-member central commission for inspecting discipline of party members. Mr. Chen was oamed first secretary of the commission. The commission may be aimed at cleaning up the ranks of the more than 5 million Chinese who have joined the Communist Party since 1966, when leaders commit-ted to Mao's most dogmatic thoughts exercised great control over admissions. In the two years since Mao's death, the official press often has charged some party offi-cials with not vigorously pulsuing controversial policies, like incentive bonuses, that were criticized by Mao as creating the basis for a new

One of the new Politburo members is Teng Ying-chao, 75, the widow of the late Premier Chou En-lai. Mr. Chou was a highly popular leader who sponsored Mr. Teng's program for rapidly modernizing the economy. His widow has been active in the party for nearly 60 years and becomes the highestranking woman in China.

Hu Yao-pang, 63, head of the party's organization department, also was promoted to the Politburo to join his good friend, Mr. Teng. The careers of the two men have been closely linked and Red Guards provided evidence for the decision to purge both men during Wang Chen, 69, a vice premier, was promoted to the Politburo af-ter his much-publicized trip to Britain to negotiate the purchase of Harrier vertical-takeoff-and-land-ing jets. Mr. Wang appears to serve as the leadership's chief expert on armaments, shipbuilding and offshore oil.

The promotions continued a pattern of returning to high office vet-eran officials who had criticized some of Mao's more utopian schemes for ecocomic develop-ment. Chen Yun appeared to lose most of what bad been his considerable power in the government af-ter 1949, when he derided Mao's ambitious Great Leap Forward with this sentence: "Ooe cannot reach heaven in a single step." Mr. Chen's words came back to baunt him during the Cultural Revolu-tion, but his steady, results-oriented approach oow reflects national economic policy.

The communique spoke of a serious situation in Chinese agriculture, which has "been severely damaged in recent years and remains very weak on the whole."
The Central Committee ordered generous new incentives to raise the sluggish grain production, now ex-pected barely to exceed last year's estimated 285 million tons.

Purge Victims Eulogized

CANTON, China, Dec. 25 (NYT) — In an extraordinary ges-ture of atonement, China held a large memorial service in Peking yesterday for two of the most prominent victims of purges under Mao.

The service was in memory of Peng Teh-huai, one of the country's Peng Teh-huai, one of the country's greatest military heroes, who was ousted by Mao in 1959 after a bitter quarrel, and Tao Chu, the fourth-ranking member of the Communist Party at the time he was disgraced in 1967. Both men died during the Cultural Revolution, according to eulogies read yesterday and broadcast by Peking radio.

Mr. Teng delivered the eulogy at the memorial service for Mr. Peng. He blamed Mr. Peng's ouster and death on the disgraced "Gang of Four," which includes Mao's widow, Chiang Ching.

A Crowd-Pleasing 'Veronique'

By David Stevens

DARIS, Dec. 25 (IHT) - This season's effort to refurbish the Salle Favart (alias the Opera Comique) with items from its historic repertory, successfully begue with Gounod's "Le Medecin Malgre Lui." has been taken another step with a crowd-pleasing but heavy-handed production of Andre Messager's "Veronique."

Messager, who died not quite 50 years ago, was a formidable figure in Parisian musical life. He was at various times musical director of the Comique and co-director of the Paris Opera, and for a while he also ran Loodon's Covent Garden.

As an operatic conductor, his range eccompassed the world premiere of Debussy's "Pelleas et Melisande" and a cyclic performance of Wagner's "Ring." At the same time, be was a prolific composer of "light" theater musical opera comique, operetta, musical comedy and ballet.

"Veronique," although billed as an opera comique, fits more readily into the operetta pigeonhole. It has the ohligatory characters, the plot has the expected tics, and it is out-fitted with some ensemble numbers — such as the galop that ends Act II — of decidedly Offenbachian

It also has music that makes it an exemplar of the genre — elegant, lively and invincibly charming, with a musical sophistication that sometimes manifests itself in an outright lampoon of other styles, hut more often is half-hidden by the light touch.

"Veronique" was first performed in 1898 at the Bouffes-Parisiens.

Who Is B. Traven? BBC Says Mystery Is Solved

L ONDON, Dec. 25 (AP) — The hunt for the identity of B. Traven, the mysterious anthor of "The Treasure of the Sierra Madre," "The Death Ship," "The Rebellion of the Hanged" and other novels, is over, British broadcasters say.

After a search in Mexico, the United States and Europe they identified him as Herman Albert Otto Maksymilian Feige, the son of a hrickburner in the Polish village of Swiebodzin, 60 miles west of Poznan. They say he was born in 1882 when the village was part of Germany.

A British Broadcasting Corp. research team headed by Will Wyatt, says they traced the family and interviewed a hrother and sister of the writer, both octogenarians now living in an uni-dentified village in Lower Saxony in West Germany.

The team confirmed earlier reports that Traven was the man who called himself Ret Marut, editor of a German anarchis paper. The Treasure of the Sierra

The final clue was in the London police file. For the only time in his life. Marut gave his real name and birthplace.

The BBC team went to Swiebodzin and found io the city hall hirth records that tallied with the London file. Traven had once used the alias Wienecke. It was his mother's maiden name. He gave the London police the occupations of his father and mother as potter and factory worker. The only pottery in the village was a brickworks

His aged siblings looked at photos of Croves from Mexico and said, "Yes, that's him."

The BBC said it found no evidence for a theory that Traven was two men — one who had the experiences that became the subjects of the novels, and the other who wrote them. They also screened interviews with persons who knew Croves, including his widow, who said he was a born narrator and could have written his first novel, "The Cottonpick-ers," set in Mexico, as early as

"My work is important," Tra-ven once said, "I am not a writer. I shout. I want to be nothing but the word."

Most of his novels harp on the theme of injustice. All are granly realistic, stressing human suffer ing and rejecting political and religious institutions.

Interviewer Robinson concluded: "All that matters about him at last is his work. He hid behind it, he vanished into it. He achieved his ambition. He became the word."

Traven once wrote: "If you do not wish to be lied to, do not ask questions. The only real defense civilized man has against anybody who bothers him is to lie. There would be no lies if there were no questions."

The necropolis was constructed by the mercenaries of the Mameluke warrior caste when they seized control of Egypt during the middle of the 13th century. They built elaborate mausoleums with Arabesque interiors. Successive rulers added new tombs. Today, funeral processions still weave through the streets and families visit the tombs.

Some brick and-stucco tombs, with their shade trees and courtyards, resemble small villas. These are the most sought-after by man under you, so what?"

Yet for all the architectural diversity of its 100,000 tombs, the City of the Dead leaves an impression of neglect and desolation. Its ooce-shining white domes and mi-narets have been weatherbeaten into somber browns and grays. Gusts of wind send scraps of paper spinning down the dusty alleys. Scrawny goats and half-wild dogs root through garbage compacted against the mausoleum walls.

The government tolerates the technically illegal population because it has no other bousing to offer. Electricity and some water and sewage lines have been introduced. There are now hutcher and grocery shops wedged among the tombs. A hus line runs into the southern quarter of the area.

A police station, medical clinic and post office have been set up, along with four public schools that operate three shifts a day. One teen-ager (who recently dropped out) reports that there were 74 students in his class.

Kamal, who is director of an elegant 19th-century tomh that is one of 1,800 maintained by his ministry, recalls that as inte as the end of World War II the area had fewer than 10,000 residents, mostly caretakers. Now he guesses that 200,000 people live in his part of the cemetery and possibly more in the section to the south.

Residents said that crime in the City of the Dead is no worse than in the rest of Cairo. Mahmoud Mohany, born io the cemetery 40 years ago, recalls that "thieves and criminals used to hide here, but now they can't do it because there are too many people."

New York Stock Market

By Vartanig G. Vartan

NEW YORK, Dec. 25 (NYT) - On Tuesday morning of last week, shortly after the stock market opened. James Hardesty was seated at his desk on the 17th floor of 36 South Charles Street in Baltimore. A man from the trading desk rushed into his office and shouted: "IBM's taising its dividend and splitting four-for-one!"

At the news, Mr. Hardesty, vice president and chief investment analyst for Investment Counselors of Maryland, Inc., smiled, His company, a subsidiary of the Equitable Bancorporation of Baltimore, manages $375 nullion in assets for pension funds and other clients. IBM, to the tune of about $10 million, is the biggest single stock holding in client portfolios at Mr. Hardesty's company.

How did he feel upon hearing the news? He replied, "Good." It was a response shared by money managers across the United States, inasmuch as IBM long has ranked as the kingpin investment of institutions. As for the stock, it jumped 1234 points on Tuesday and gave the entire market a lift.

The market, at that point, sorely needed some elevation. Only the day before, the Dow Jones industrial average had tumbled nearly 18 points. That plunge came after the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, meeting in Abu Dhabi, caused tremors in Wall Street by deciding to raise oil prices by 14.5 percent over the coming year. The street had been betting on an increase half that size and, as a result, the official announcement caused some stockbrokers to consider exchanging their three-piece Brooks Brothers suits for sackcloth and ashes.

For the full week, IBM drove up nearly 20 points, to finish at 295. As for the blue-chip Dow, it ended at 808.47, a net gain of 3.12 points, thanks to a rally of more than 13 points Friday after the government reported that the rate of increase in consumer prices slowed nouceably during November, IBM has not been a component of the Dow industrials since

Unfettered International Loan Business

U.S. Backs N.Y. 'Free Trade' Banking

By Steven R. Weisman

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25 (NYT)

— The Carter administration, giving its support to Gov. Hugh Carey, has quietly endorsed a conroversial proposal to establish a "free trade zone" for international banking in New York City.

Banks in New York City would be able to conduct international operations unencumbered by state and city taxes or by Federal Reserve Board requirements and ceilings on interest rates. Gov. Carey and the banks argue that this would lure billions of dollars worth of business back to the city from havens overseas, creating 5,000 to 6.000 local jobs. However, the Federal Reserve Board, whose approval is necessary, is known to have serious reservations. There is also outspoken opposition among some in Congress, who fear it would drastically increase unregulated banking at a time when they believe regulations of banks should be tightened, not relaxed. In B letter to William Miller, chairman of the Federal Reserve, Robert Carswell, deputy secretary of the Treasury, gave a qualified endorsement to the concept provided certain regulatory questions can be resolved. The Fed has iovited

"As far as we're concerned, we state taxes and regulations from indon't see any real negatives to the proposal," Mr. Carswell said. "We are generally positive about the expansion of international banking activity in the United States, and not just in New York City." No other state has requested a free trade zone for its banks.

Mr. Carswell's letter, which was sent late last week, was a victory for Gov. Carey, who has spent months lobbying for the free trade zone. He and his advisers have been pressing the idea on the White House staff, which in turn is known to have prodded the Treasury.

The administration's endorse-ment, thrusting it into one of the liveliest bank-regulation controversies in years, does not directly af-fect the Federal Reserve Board, which is an independent panel of regulators. But it is likely to heighten the pressure on the board to embrace the proposal.

At issue are the billions of dollars in loans that such giants as Citibank, Morgan Guaranty Trust and Chase Manhattan have made abroad with money on deposit in their overseas branches. The overseas business - in the Bahamas, London and other places - has grown enormously in recent years, and now accounts for a large share of the profits of the major banks. , in June, the New York State ternational loans, continuent on the Fed following suit by approving the free trade zone. The legislature act-ed at the request of the New York Clearinghouse, the association of the 11 major commercial banks in the city.

This fall, Gov. Carey joined with executives of the major banks in a meeting with Mr. Miller to press for the proposal. It was another instance of the cooperation between Gov. Carey, a Democrat, and the financial community, mostly Republican, that had its origins in the effort to rescue New York City from bankruptcy in 1975.

Specifically, the Fed is being asked to waive reserve requirements and interest-rate limitations in New York for banking that is purely international in origin and destination. Depositors with ordinary domestic accounts would not be affected.

If the Fed approved such a free trade zone, according to the clearinghouse, the international banking activity would be treated as if it were still overseas, where the regulations do not now apply. The banks maintain that this would enable them to carry on business near their bome branches instead of abroad, but that it would not have

Lucifer Prods the Sun Devils

By Dave Anderson

NEW YORK, Dec. 25 (NYT) -If his players are Sun Devils, he is their Lucifer — or at least that's his reputation as the Arizona State football coach. Mention his cruel. harsh image to him and he says. "I would never kick a kid. I've slapped 'em on the helmet with my hand, hut that hurts my hand more than it does them." than it does them.

But whatever he does or does not do. Frank Kush gets results. Of the active college football coaches, only Paul (Bear) Bryant of Alabama and Woody Hayes of Ohio State have more victories. In his 21 seasons out in the Arizona desert where the Sun Devils play in Tempe, a Phoenix suburh. Kush has a record of 173 victories against only 53 losses and I tie after the inaugural Garden State Bowl against Rutgers at Giants Stadium in New Jersey, Arizona State won. 34-18. Kush has not been back East much lately, but he remembers it when he was a tough, hard kid, one of 15 children of a coal miner who died too young with the soot in his lungs from Mine 35 in Windher. Pa., near Johnstown.

Once Was Enough

"I don't put up with much foolishness." Kush says. "That's the way I was brought up. My father just told me how to do something once."

When four players, including a starting defensive tackle, missed the bus from Tucson back to Tempe after an 18-17 victory over rival Arizona University this season, the coach told them to miss the plane for the Garden State Bowl trip. Kush demands discipline. He demanded it from Reggie Jackson when the Yankees' cleanup hitter was a varsity football player as an Arizona State sophomore hefore signing with the Kansas City A's baseball organization.

Reggie was a running back and a strong safety for me." Kush

Kush does not expect his football players to mature till they are

NASL Players Suing League Over Its Draft

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25 (UPI) — More than 75 current and former North American Soccer League players have filed a class action anti-trust suit in U.S. District Court in Minneapolis challenging the league's draft and other policies. The suit also challenges the standard player contract, waiver system, roster size and two-year powers of the league's commissioner. Phil Woosnam, and its awarding of territorial rights to franchise holders. An additional 40 players are expected to join the suit. A Min-

He went to Michigan State where he was an all-America defensive guard on its 1951 national champion team at only 5 feet 9 inches and 170 pounds. Now he's about 180 pounds, but he's always been big enough. And tough enough. That toughness is instilled in his players. At practice before the Garden State Bowl, he bad his first-team offense scrimmaging against his first-team defense. Some college traditionalists were astounded.

"Hey, listen." Kush says.

The Diary of Virginia Woolf Vol II: 1920-1924

Edited by Anne Olivier Bell, assisted by Andrew McNeillie. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich. 371 pp. $12.95.

Reviewed by Samuel Hynes chocolate eyes, drooping lids, and a protruding tusk", T.S. Eliot comes

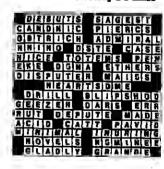

WHEN Leonard Woolf pub-lished a selection from his wife's private journals in 1953 he called the book "A Writer's Diary." and he made it just that: a sensitive artist's thoughts about her own writing and her opinions of other people. The book was valuable, illuminating, continually interesting — one could run through all the standard reviewers' terms of praise - but it was also a misrepresentation of its subject. Leonard Woolf had set out to represent his late wife as a great writer, and to make his point he left out all her other woman's roles; so much so that the final entry, written four days before her suicide, comes as a poignant surprise: "And now with some pleasure I find that it's seven; and must cook dinner. Haddock and sausage meat. I think it is true that one gains B certain hold on sausage and haddock by writing them down." The rest of "A Writer's Diary" doesn't prepare you for that — Virginia Woolf, great artist, cooking dinner.

Now, in the complete diary, the haddock-and-sausage-meat Virgin-ia Woolf comes into her own, and what a delight she is! The woman in "A Writer's Diary" was someone you had to admire, but wouldn't want to meet at dinner - so intense, so industrious, so selfabsorbed, so relentlessly literary; but the complete Virginia Woolf is perfect company, a gossipy, bitchy, witty woman, interested in all kinds of things that have nothing to do with High Art, and entertaining about them all. She is a friend to a size of belliant and entertaining circle of brilliant and peculiar peo-ple, a devoted wife, the proprietor of a small publishing business (and also typesetter), a fond aunt, a keeper of houses and employer of servants, a country woman when she's in the country who nevertheless returns to London as might a mistress to her lover. She is a fascinated observer of society (the dia-ries remind us, if we need remind-ing, that her proper place in literary history is with the great social novelists, that she is more like Jane Austen than like James Joyce); but she is also good on nature, knows the names of flowers and moths, and is a sensitive recorder of landscape and weather.

A Bloomsbury World

In all this bounty of observation and opinion, the self-absorption disappears, and one begins to understand what she meant when she wrote, in an earlier diary, "I haven't an inner life." Her mind did not habitually turn inward, her life was a life of impressions, a continuous interaction between herself and her world. That world was, of and her world. That world was, of course, an enclosed one — the intellectual middle class of early 20th-century London that she herself called "Bloomsbury." The cast of characters is large, but relatively fixed: enter Lytton, enter Morgan, enter Nessa, Maynard, Lydia, Desmond, Saxon, Frankie, Carrington, About, these omnimesent friends About these omnipresent friends she is affectionate, but never sentimental, and frequently pleasingly bitchy. Vita Sackville-West enters her life, and Mrs. Woolf remarks that she is "not much to my severer taste — florid, moustached, parak-ect coloured, with all the supple ease of the aristocracy, but not the wit of the artist"; E.M. Forster passes, and she observes that "the middle age of buggers is not to be contemplated without horror; she meets Arnold Bennett (not strictly Bloomsbury), and fixes him with an image: "a lovable sca lion, with her early novels, she saw them, quite correctly, as apprentice work, preparations for what was coming. So, when Maynard Keynes crincized "Night and Day" for its excessive detail, she could calmly reply: "Oh, it's a dull book, I know but don't you see you must put it all in before you can leave out." In "Jacob's Room" she had begun to "leave out," and she saw that book as her real beginning. that book as her real beginning.

Even if there were no Virginia

"There's no doubt in my mind that have found out how to begin (at 40) to say something in my own voice," she wrote, "and that interests me so that I feel I can go ahead without praise." Daily Diversity

Yet even now, as she went ahead into "Mrs. Dalloway," her life as an artist was continually mixed with her other lives: "Compliments, clothes, building, photogra-phy," she wrote in 1922, "it is for these reasons that I cannot write "Mrs. Dalloway." Reading her life one day at a time we can see not only how it was that she could not write her novel, but how she could how the diversity of her daily life came together to give her what she strove for; not the sense of Art, but the sense of Life. "People come most days," she writes in the final entry to this volume. "I enjoy printing afternoons, and thou it the ing afternoons, and think it the sanest way of life - for if I were always writing, or merely recouping from writing, I should be like an inbreeding rabbit — my progeny becoming weakly albinos." Sane is the right word for her, after all: it was a precarious sanity, and in the end it failed her, but it was a strong and certain samity in the work - chance of pushing the opposition to a higher level as illustrated on the diagramed deal.

West led the heart king and noted that his partner played the eight. This was a suit-preference signal suggesting a diamond shift, but there are times when a player should disregard his partner's mes-sages. West knew that a club shift was desirable and that a diamond play could wait, so he put the club queen on the table. Now South had to lose five tricks, for a loss of 500

In the replay, South was doubled in four spades, and again the lead was the heart king. But this time, West made the error of shifting to a diamond at the second trick. East took the ace, and South brought home the doubled game by discard-ing two clubs from dummy on his diamond winners and eventually ruffing clubs in the dummy.

Notice that the diamond shift i itself, though wrong, was not need sarily fatal to the defense. A shift! the nine, suggesting a lack of high card strength in the suit, mighave inspired East to duck, leaves the declarer with two club lose and beating him by one trick

Oilers and Falcons Advance, Oust Dolphins and Eagles in Playoffs

Houston Led By Pastorini

By Bob Oates

MIAMI. Dec. 25 - Io his best game of his best year in pro foot-ball, quarterback Dan Pastorini helped the Houstoo Oilers knock the Miami Dolphins out of the Na-tional Foothall League playoffs here yesterday, 17-9.

here yesterday. 17-9.

If was a struggle between the wounded survivors of a long seasoo — Pastorini and halfback Earl Campbell of Houston vs. quarterback Bob Griese and halfback Delvin Williams of Miami — and it turned out that Griese and Williams were the more seriously inliams were the more seriously injured pair.

Griese could not pass much with his aching ribs and Williams could not run much on his had knee and that took care of the Dolphins.

Pastorini, who came to Florida with a knee injust that made him.

with a knee injury that made him seemiogly the worst injured of the huoch, completed 20 of 29 passes
— most of them play-action throws
after fake handoffs to Campbell for the 306 yards that put Miami

Aching Ribs

Campbell performed with three cracked ribs, which kept him going hack to the beoch for repairs, hut gained 86 tough yards as the Oilers moved into a second-round meet-ing with New England next week-

Until the fourth quarter this was a game that kept threatening to develop into a hig ooe hut always foundered somewhere oo a fumble, interception or hlitz. The Dolphins fought Houston to a 7-7 half and fought Houstoo to a 7-7 half and there were visions of overtime when Pastorini linally put the Oilers into a gallop, moving on four completed fourth-quarter passes from the Houston 30 to the Miami 19. There Toni Fritsch's 35-yard field goal won the game, 10-7.

As the Dolphins visibly sagged, the Oilers then plowed for 50 yards on nine runs by Campbell and Tim Wilson and it was 17-7. On Houston's last possession the score be-came 17-9 when Pastorini ran out of the end zone to take an automatic safety.

"If we'd been healthier, we'd have done more on offense." Griese said afterward, "I'm not going to say my ribs didn't bother me. My timing was off. I was throwing high and probably 100 quickly."

It was the inside threat of Campbell and the overhead accuracy of Pastorini that enabled Houston to accumulate 455 yards in total offense to 209 for Miami.

Time and again, Pastorini faked to Campbell, the National Football League's leading ground gainer, then pulled the ball back and passed to seven different receivers. including split end Ken Burrough, who caught six passes for 103

In the second quarter alone Pas-Iorini completed play-action passes of 53 and 55 yards to Burrough and tight end Mike Barber. But as ineflective as the Miami defense looked on those and similar plays, it did not break for three quarters.

On the goal line the Oilers were a team without a puoch, partly due le Campbell's injury but also because of strong, game-long perfor-mances by linebackers Kim Bokamper and Larry Gordon.

Miami moved in fits and starts, losing the hall five time on turnovers, including two Griese inter-ceptions. Miami's quarterback fin-ished the game with only 11 completions in 28 attempts and the two interceptions.

Miami's only touchdown followed ao Oiler turnover, Fielding a high punt, Houston's Robert Woods let the ball secot through his hands at the Oiler 21 in the first

On second-and-2, with the visitors expecting a ruo. Griese passed 13 yards into the end zone to tight end Andre Tillman.

Atlanta Wins At End, Again

By Michael Strauss ATLANTA. Dec. 25 (NYT) — In the kind of frantic closing sequence that has marked their play all season, the Atlanta Falcoos defeated the Philadelphia Eagles, 14-13, here yesterday in a National Football League wild-card playoff game. The stuhborn Falcons, headed for what seemed like certain defeat, scored twice on passes by Steve Bartkowski in the last five minutes and won oo Tim Mazzetti's extra point. As a reward, Atlanta gaioed the right to play Dallas, the defend-ing Super Bowl champioo, on Sat-urday in the oext round of National Conference playoffs.

The Eagles had a chance to win with 13 seconds left hut Mike Michel, a punter pressed into service as a place kicker late this season, missed a 33-yard field goal. There was irony in that because Mazzetti, the successful kicker, was cut by the Eagles in training camp

"I just missed it." Michel said later. I was trying to get my foot on the hall and to coocentrate. I old all that hot I still missed it. Iusually hook it. I kept waiting for this one to hook, but it staved straight." And it wound up wide to

First Playoff Game

The contest, witnessed by a raindampened crowd of 49,447, marked the first time Atlanta had been in a playoff since joining the league in 1966. The Eagles were in their first playoff game since they won the NFL title in 1960.

Alhough the Falcons were behind most of the game, no one in the crowd budged; the team's sup-porters have become used to lastsecond heroics. Four times this season, the Falcons won games in the final 10 seconds.

Yesterday's game was won on a 37-yard aerial from Bartkowski to Wallace Francis. Only 1 minute 39 seconds remained on the clock when the Falcons' flanker fell backward into the end zone.

With the score 13-all. Mazzetti attempted the conversion. Silence fell over the stadium as he approached the ball. When it cleared the crossbar, the silence changed to hedlam. The Falcons signed Mazzetti midway through this season—at the time he was tending bar in a Philadelphia tayaen. Philadelphia tavern.

For fans not accustomed to Fal-con heroics, the early developments would have found many of them homeward bound by the middle of the third quarter. But past perform-ance was against Philadelphia. Against San Francisco on Oct. 22, the Falcons won 20.17 with a conthe Falcons won, 20-17, with a second to play. Two weeks ago in their 20-17 success against the Redskins, a 32-yard field goal by Mazzetti brought victory with no time remaining.

Against the Eagles, Bartkowski first connected with Jim Mitchell on a 19-yard touchdown pass with 4:56 left to get within 13-7 and then hit Francis.

Ron Jaworski then moved the Eagles within field goal range and the Falcon offense had to sweat it out on the sidelines, just watching. The missed field goal was not Michel's only crrant kick of the game. His first attempt vesterday went wide from 42 yards out and he missed his first extra point attempt after Harold Carmichael caught a 13-yard touchdown pass from Jaworski. The Eagles took a 13-0 lead midway through the third period on Wilbert Montgomery's 1-yard toochdown. "We've gotten off to slow starts all year," said Francis. "But the de-fense has always kept us in it. We just felt all we needed was a TD to get us started."

Barkowski finished with 18 completions in 32 attempts for 243 yards, 13 of 20 for 193 yards in the

West Point Orders Football Inquiry

By Gordon S. White Jr.

NEW YORK, Dec. 25 tNYT) — Lt. Gen. Andrew Goodpaster, su-perintendeot of the U. S. Military Academy, has ordered an immediate investigation into charges by Army's former head football coach. Homer Smith, that the Academy vi-olated National Collegiate Athletic Association rules.

The superintendent also directed subordinates to notify the NCAA that the investigation has begun, under the direction of Col. Robert W. Berry, chairman of the Academy's Department of Law, and said. We will provide the NCAA with information of the outcome of this investigation."

An NCAA spokesman said he expected the organization to begin its investigation shortly.

Speaking by phone on Friday from his office at West Point, N.Y.. Goodpaster reacted strongly to one of the charges made by Smith and said: "There was an allegation that there was some kind of cover-up in this. That I would say flatly is quite untrue. We have no interest in a cover-up and any imputation of that is untrue."

Smith, who was dismissed as Army's 27th head football coach on Dec. 6 after five seasons at Army, Smith disclosed and Goodpaster confirmed that Army officers had cooducted an investigation a year ago. The superintendent said: "I can tell you that the investigation was very thorough. It took up each of the items in detail. It indicated every action that would be appropriate to give us assurance that we were in fact observing the stated requirements. Speaking of the new action. Goodpaster said: "All matters that were not investigated last year or any new allegations will be thor-oughly investigated and action will be taken. I've directed that investigation already."

Goodpaster said that the Academy did not inform the NCAA of last year's investigation because "we took the action internally here. As I recall, we reviewed that ques-tion and I was advised formally that notification of the inquiry was not considered appropriate. The ac-tion was taken in-bouse and no report was taken in-house and no re-port was necessary.

"However, given that this has now been made pubic I feel that a report to the NCAA is required.'

The NCAA can be expected to be-gin its inquiry into Smith's charges in the next few weeks.

scored 28 first-half points.

A.J. (Jam) Jones, a freshman, paced the Longhorns with 100 yards rushing and scoring runs of 14 and 1 yards.

Johnny (Lam) Jones, an Olympic gold-medal sprinter, scored from 7 yards on an end around and caught a 28-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Mark McBath during the first-half outburst.

Johnny (Ham) Jones, who gained 104 yards, scored on a 32-yard run. The other Texas touchdown came oo a 2-yard ruo in the first half by McBath.

The Terrapins, whose only two losses in a 9-2 season had been to Penn State and Clemson, could not solve Texas' defense. One of Maryland's few scoring threats came in the second quarter when the Terra-pins got to the Texas 33.

Sophomore Dale Castro missed on a 52-yard field goal try at the end of that drive and Maryland rarely crossed midfield after that. In the game's final moments Mary-

Texas, which compiled an 8-3 record, was runner-up in the SWC despite injuries much of the year.

The Looghorns scored the first three times they had the ball, going 42, 49 and 40 yards in first-quarter drives. The longest Texas drive was 40 yards.

Texas surpassed Nebraska's 45-6 victory over Georgia in 1969 to set a record for the most one-sided victory in the 44-year history of the Sun Bowl.

out because they are dressed in their burnooses. while the other OPEC represent-atives fade into the background in their English-tailored suits.

I, for one, think the OPEC people Buchwald made a serious mistake in raising the price of their oil. The reason they gave was that the dollar had been so weakened by inflation that they were losing money. What they didn't say was one of the major reasons for the dollar sagging was the price they put on their oil in the first place. Since the OPEC nations have accumulated most of the dollars in the world, it would have been in their interests to CUT the price of oil by 14% percent rather than raise it. This would have sent the value of the dollar to new beights, and wrecked the Japanese ven. the Ger-

Paunches Are, Well, Sort of, Fashionable

LONDON, Dec. 25 (AP) — Fat is fashionable — almost.

According to a survey carried out hy one of Britain's biggest shirt makers. Tern, women seem to pre-fer a man with just the slightest suggestion of a paunch.

Out, according to the British woman, is the beanpole look. The survey showed less than one in five woman polled went for that, against 34 percent who preferred their men to bave a slight sugges-tion of a tummy, and 31 percent who liked a slight pannch.

A spokesman for the firm said there were four easy ways to tell whether your fat is more than fash-

 If you can't see your feet when you stand upright.

 If you can't see your belt wben you sit down.

· If you can't lean forward without hursting your shirt buttons.

 If you can't tie your shoe laces "without finding your middle re-gion an obstruction."

The new price raise just cooked up in Ahu Dbabi will not solve the dollar problem, hut exacerhate it, and in a year the OPEC countries will be complaining again how their dollars being blown away by the winds of inflation.

I wish I could only blame OPEC and the Arabs in OPEC for all our problems. But I just talked to an economist who said the cost of fuel. while it starts with the OPEC countries, goes through many stages.

"When the cost of crude oil is raised," he told me, "everyone gets in the act. Let's say that the OPEC chaps add three cents to the price of n gallon in Abu Dhahi. "The 'Seven Sister' oil companies at the Petroleum Club in Houston say to each other. Hey, since the OPEC ministers have raised the price three cents, this is a good chance for us to raise it two cents, more. The consumer will blame the Arabs and we'll be let off scot-free." So now we have five cents added to the gallon. But the people who transport oil in tankers, rail-road cars and trucks accidentally run into each other in a diner out-side of Chicago and say, Did you see what they did in Abu Dhabi? Upped the price of fuel three cents. And someone else says, 'And the folks in Houson met their three cents and raised them two. I say we should add another cent on for transportation. If we don't do it now we may never get a chance un-til the next OPEC meeting.'

"So now we're talking about a six-cent raise," my economist friend continued.

"The refiner adds another cent for unleaded, and the oil company sales departments add a cent for good luck.

"The advertising departments tell management they're going to need another two cents a gallon to sponsor more good shows on pubsponsor more good shows on pro-lic television, so the people who have to pay an additional 10 cents a gallon will think nice things about oil companies."

"Then what you're saying is, the only thing we can hope to get out of the OPEC meeting in Ahu Dba-bi is another TV series like Upstairs, Downstairs'?"

You got it." "Is there any hope that the price of oil will ever go down?"
"Only if they discover a lot of it off the coast of New Jersey." That would be awful.

"Why do you say that?" "Well, it's one thing to kiss the bem of an Arab's burnoose in Saudi Arahia - but it's another to kiss one worn hy a person who comes from New Jersey."

Il Male: 'Stupid, Nasty, Lucid and Cruel'

Il Male had struck appears, altogether libelously, on tl Male's masthead. Italy has no satirical tradition. so it is not surprising that 32 of Il Male's 36 issues so far bave been seized by police on grounds of obscenity. But such tactics have helped the paper's boom from seven copies in its first edi-tion last February to 150,000 now. Legal writs have also grown: They average 100 a month. At II Male, they consider suits part of a deliberate plan to break them. That could well be more than parantia. Danger certainly attaches to Italy's only real satirical publication, as its only pro-fessional journalist, Vincenzo Sparagna, well knows.

anarchistic youngsters should have gotten together to publish a paper is not surprising. That the paper should, in less than a year, have reached the kind of circulation that few Italian weeklies achieve, is. That it is striking a major chord is apparent from the offers for books, televising shows and various endorsements that are pouring in.

The success formula has a number of ingredients. In Italian terms, the paper is revolution-ary. Where Italians are privately individualistic, they are on the whole conformist at group level. To make private jokes about the death of a pope or a president is normal; such humor in public, through the printed word, is, to Italians, incredible.

More interestingly, Il Male and its success sums up the political evolution of a generation that cut its teeth in May of 1968. Rebellion against ideological and cultural orthodoxy is what spawned and maintains the paper and its readers. Where a mi-nority of the 1968 movement, like the Red Brigades, opted for terrorism as the logical next step, a growing majority seems to be rejecting all organized thought systems. Where the Red Brigades picked up the Walther P38, Il Male picked up the pen and sought refuge in black humor. But the ideological roots are basically the same. Moro Cartoons

Il Male has a gift for hitting targets squarely between the eyes. The best — or worst, depending on the point of view work the paper has ever done was during the kidnapping of Aldo Moro. A week after the event, Il Male ran a cartoon showing Moro's jailers beating their beads against the wall in despair as the statesman went into an interminable confession. Two weeks later, another drawing showed Moro as a vanquished gladiator, with the Christian Democrat and Com-munist establishment, dressed as emperors and senators, giving him a unanimous thumbs down. Incredibly scurrilous at the time, both cartoons, it turned out, were pretty close to the mark.

Naturally, II Male's shock value is diminishing week by week. not because its contents are getting less vicinus, but because the paper has become part of the landscape. Police used to be daily visitors, hut now are knocking more rarely on the door, though they're still trying to identify the staffer who impersonated John Paul II (this despite the fact that his name was published in several papers).

PEOPLE: China's Teng Chosen Time's Man of Year

Teng Hsiao-ping, the deputy premier of China, has been named Time magazine's man of the year for 1978. Teng, 74, was cited for the "tremendous enterprise he has iaunched to propel the nation into the modern world." He has been called the "motive force" behind the campaign to get the world's oldest continuous civilization to the 21st century on schedule and end its isolation to the outside world. Although Teng ranks only third in the Peking Politburo (behind Pre-mier Hua Kuo-feng, Mao's titular successor, and Marshal Yeh Chienying, the figurehead chief of state), he has been called the "principal architect" of China's four modernizations - an attempt simultaneously to improve the country's agriculture, science and technology, industry and defense. Teng is the 52d in a Time man-of-the-year line 52d in a Time man-of-the-year line stretching back to 1927 and the choice of Charles Lindbergh. Elvis Presley's mystique is still worth millions, according to Memphis court records that show the singer's estate earned almost $5 million since his death 16 months ago. The figure was contained in a request filed by his father, Vernon, who asked approval for payments to lawyers and accountants and for his salary. The elder Presley said the estate earned $4,993,897 from Aug. 22, 1977, through July 31, 1978.
